Radice Rind Oil Cured 2026: Technical Analysis of the Apple Shape

The 2026 production from the Radice workshop confirms the value of artisanal continuity within the Italian pipe-making landscape. Under the direction of Marzio and Gianluca Radice, who inherited and consolidated the manufacturing protocols of the founder Luigi, the Cucciago-based workshop continues to produce smoking instruments characterized by high mechanical efficiency and distinctive aesthetic research.

The Rind Series and Oil Curing Treatment

The Rind series is distinguished by a bold rustication that not only provides the pipe with a tactile texture but also increases the heat exchange surface area. The most significant technical element of this specimen is the Oil Curing process:

- The Technique: This involves immersing the briar in a blend of vegetable oils, followed by a cyclical drying process.
- Objectives: This treatment accelerates the expulsion of the wood's natural tannins. The result is an optimized break-in period and a reduction in the acrid taste often associated with the very first smokes in untreated pipes.
- Physical Properties: The oil treatment improves the wood's resilience to heat and imparts a specific lightness to the pipe. In recent years, Radice's production has focused more heavily on classic finishes, making Oil Cured pieces rarer and highly sought after on the market.

Model Characteristics and Design

The specimen in question is a medium-sized Apple, a classic shape prized for its ergonomic bowl and overall balance.

- Finish and Contrast: The body of the pipe features a deep, dark coloration provided by the rustication. In stark contrast, the rim has been finished smooth, flat, and left in a natural tone. This stylistic choice allows for the observation of the underlying briar's quality and creates a highlight within the overall design.
- Internal Engineering: The chamber features a precise cylindrical bore with a capacious volume, ensuring consistent combustion and optimal tobacco management during prolonged smoking sessions.
- Stem: Crafted from acrylic, a material chosen for its color stability and resistance to oxidation, guaranteeing minimal maintenance over time.

Heritage and Continuity

The work of Marzio and Gianluca Radice in this 2026 piece reflects the workshop's philosophy: rigorous respect for their father's teachings combined with contemporary executive precision. The Rind Oil Cured series remains a benchmark for smokers who prefer a dry aromatic yield and a structure capable of withstanding frequent use.
