A fascinating discovery: the pipe which does not yet hot. In 1982 Professor Enrico Fabri discovered a four page document which contained several inventions which seemed like something created by Leonardo da Vinci. Numerous studies were carried out on these four pages: on the pigments, the materials and the writing style; a carbon 14 test was also carried out to scintifically determine the outhorship and age of the document: a Leonardo da Vinci from 1510. Among the studies contained in the document there is one which mentions a specific request by Louis XII, the King of France: a pipe which would remain as cool as possible. Leonardo da Vinci devised a twin-walled terracotta pipe which was cooled by the air circulating in the cavity. Now Ser Jacopo has risen to the challenge of creating Leonardo da Vinci's project and make it tangible using the same technical means but in a different material: briar. And this has led to the creation of "Leonardo", the pipe that does not get hot, an object rich in history and genius.

Ser Jacopo Leonardo R1 Delecta E Pipe - Rusticated Bent with Silver Trim

The Ser Jacopo Leonardo R1 Delecta E is a bent pipe distinguished by its generous dimensions and striking visual presence. It is designed for smokers seeking an extended, deeply satisfying experience.

Aesthetics and Craftsmanship

The body of the pipe features a rich, dark rustication—an artisanal finish that not only provides a pleasant tactile texture but also promotes better heat dissipation during use.

The aesthetic highlight is undoubtedly the seamless visual continuity between the shank and the stem:

- The Delecta Band: Inset on the shank is the traditional, finely crafted Sterling silver band, bearing the Ser Jacopo signature and the official silver hallmark.
- The Stem: Made of polished black acrylic, it houses a second silver band that mirrors the one on the shank, creating a refined and cohesive look.

Chamber Geometry and Balance

From a technical standpoint, the pipe features a highly capacious chamber with a regular, cylindrical bore. This internal architecture ensures an even burn of the tobacco and optimal management of the pack.

Key Feature: Despite its substantial overall size, the bent shape and the skillful weight distribution achieved by the Ser Jacopo artisans provide this model with extraordinary balance. The pipe feels comfortable both held in the hand and clenched between the teeth.
