Italian artisan pipe Ser Jacopo Delecta R1 D | Freehand Shape

Handmade pipe Ser Jacopo Delecta R1 D

This handmade pipe was crafted in Italy at the Pesaro workshop of Ser Jacopo, a hallmark of the Italian handcrafted pipe tradition. Graded as a Delecta R1 D, it belongs to the freehand shape category and is distinguished by its medium-large proportions, solid build, and a design focused on balancing aesthetics with functionality.

The bowl features carefully executed rustication and a slightly flattened base that allows the pipe to stand stably on flat surfaces. This stand-up design makes the model exceptionally practical when put down during a smoke.

The ensemble is completed by a ring and an acrylic mouthpiece in amber hues, selected for their warm tones and rich material character that pair seamlessly with the rusticated bowl. An elegant silver band sits between the ring and the mouthpiece, adding a refined touch of contrast and defining the junction with precision.

The medium-large size gives the pipe a commanding presence while maintaining an overall balanced structure. The generous-capacity chamber is crafted with a standard cylindrical drilling, a classic technical choice that ensures optimal smoke control and combustion.

Overall, this Ser Jacopo Delecta R1 D stands as a fine example of Italian artisan pipemaking, combining handcraftsmanship, a freehand silhouette, and meticulous attention to detail into a model with a distinct personality.
