Bowl Geometry and Smoking Performance

The 4202 designation identifies a medium-sized pipe (Group 4) with a well-balanced bowl capacity, suitable for both everyday smoking and the considered appreciation of complex tobacco blends, from English mixtures to Virginia flakes.

The cylindrical drilling carried out in the English workshops ensures smooth, consistent airflow, promoting an even burn. The fine sandblasting highlights the briar's natural grain while increasing the surface area exposed to the air, helping dissipate heat and keeping the pipe cool to the touch.

Ergonomics and Comfort: The Ideal Angle for Reading

The curvature of the Bent shape shifts the pipe's center of gravity downward, significantly reducing the leverage exerted on the jaw. The saddle stem, combined with a slightly flared fishtail button, provides a slim, stable contact point with weight distributed comfortably across the teeth.

This ergonomic combination makes the Dunhill Cumberland 4202 an excellent reading pipe. It can be held between the lips with minimal effort, leaving the hands free while keeping the bowl below the line of sight.
